

How the Collision Changed My Life

My name is Dana Whitfield. I'm 42, I work for the Lakeside school district, and I have a 3-year-old son.

For about six weeks after the crash I couldn't lift my son. He would reach for me and I had to ask my husband to pick him up. I couldn't turn my head to check my blind spot, so my husband drove me to work and to my appointments until the end of April.

I missed almost three weeks of work. When I went back, I couldn't carry the supply boxes I usually carry, and sitting at the computer all day made my arm tingle.

Before the accident I ran a 5K every Saturday morning with a group of friends. I haven't run since.

In May my mother, who watches my son while I work, went into the hospital. I had no one to watch him, so I had to stop going to the chiropractor. My neck got worse in June and I went to a pain doctor, who gave me an injection in my neck in July. It helped a lot.

Today my neck still hurts a few days a week, and I still wake up at night with neck pain once or twice a week. My doctor says I may need more injections.

I have read this statement and it is true. — Dana Whitfield, 09/30/2026
